

April Rains Bring Spectacular Spills at Katse & Mohale Dams – A Call to Explore Lesotho's Beauty!

Good News from the Highlands!

Thanks to heavy rains this April, both Katse Dam and Mohale Dam are now spilling over, creating breathtaking waterfalls across the Lesotho Highlands. This natural spectacle is not just a sign of healthy water reserves for the region – it's also a golden opportunity to showcase the stunning beauty of our mountains to locals and visitors alike!

Project Update:

The spillage is a testament to the success of our water management efforts. While our teams continue to monitor dam levels and ensure safety, this overflow highlights the abundance of water resources we are proud to steward.

The rains have transformed the highlands into a lush, vibrant paradise. Now is the perfect time to explore the wonders around our projects:

- ✧ Katse Dam: Witness the powerful spill against a backdrop of misty peaks. Don't miss the nearby Katse Botanical Gardens, now bursting with wildflowers.
- ✧ Mohale Dam: Hike along scenic trails to viewpoints where the dam's cascades meet the rugged landscape.

As members of the LHDA team, you've helped make these resources thrive. Now, let's celebrate and share the magic of the highlands! Whether you're planning a weekend trip or inviting friends, this is a chance to boost tourism and show the world why Lesotho's mountains are unforgettable.

Come See for Yourself!

Pack your boots, grab your camera, and join us in discovering the awe-inspiring sights right at our doorstep. Let's turn this season's rains into memories – and remind everyone why our work here matters.

The mountains are calling – will you answer?
